PAUL WINFRED GEYER.

For the fifth time since the Class of '93 entered College the death angel has broken into our ranks and taken of the very choicest of our number. This time Paul Winfred Geyer was called on March 22. Although Paul did not enter Rutgers until the beginning of his Junior year, he had been with us long enough to endear himself to all those with whom he came in contact, and to display the evidence of those superior abilities which he possessed. He graduated from the University of New York in 1891, and had he lived ten days longer, would have been twenty-one years of age.

A talented musician, Paul made many friends and admirers by means of his violin, and his manly, independent nature is shown by the fact that he was supporting himself during his College course. His literary abilities were recognized by his teachers and classmates alike, and during the past year he had been a valuable contributor to "The Targum."

Up to within two weeks of his death Paul had been attending to his regular College duties. A dignified literary style, straightforward earnestness of purpose characterized his writing, but of especial interest to the readers of "The Targum" were the numerous poems subscribed by him, always elevating, yet of a pleasing, popular style.

"The Targum" will sorely miss Paul's poems, which always impressed us as exceptionally good attempts.

It was the purpose of his life to serve his fellow-men in the Gospel ministry, and his character, in which so many abilities and virtues were blended, seemed especially calculated to do good in the church and in the world.

The funeral services were held in his father's church in New York, and his classmates, Cussler, Janeway, Malven, Merrill, Mettler, and Tindell, served as pall-bearers. Besides the Rev. Prof. Duryee, who made a beautiful and appropriate address, Dr. Stevenson and Prof. Barbour were present at the funeral. Floral tributes were sent by his class and the Glee Club, of which he was a member. His remains were interred in Sleepy Hollow Cemetery, Tarrytown, N. Y., and we believe that Paul has now come to the complete realization of that of which he lately wrote when he said:

"Beyond the horizon's circling haze,
What can we hope, what must we fear?
And so through doubting hopes we gaze,
While time is ever bringing near,
Full knowledge of those longed-for days."

—"The Targum."

LOUIS HOWELL METTLER.

THE promising life of this bright young man was suddenly ended by a dread accident, September 4th, 1899. With another keen sportsman he was hunting plover from a wagon, at Bellemeade, and by a severe jolt caused by crossing a ditch, Mr. Mettler's gun was discharged, and the whole contents crashed into the shoulder, entering by the armpit. This occurred about 2 P. M., and though cared for by the best medical skill, aided by a mother's nursing, he died during the night.

Louis Howell Mettler, named for his maternal grandfather, was born at New Brunswick, on the 20th day of November, 1871. He was the son of William E. and Gertrude Howell Mettler. He prepared at Rutgers Grammar School and took a complete college course. He came to us with a good reputation, and maintained an honorable grade in all his studies. After graduation here he studied law for one year in the office of Willard P. Voorhees, Esq., of New Brunswick, then in the New York Law School, completed his course there in the spring of 1896; was at once admitted to the bar in the State of New York, and began the practice of his profession in the city. For three years he was engaged in building up a professional business, and in that time had achieved such success that his future high standing in his chosen profession was already assured.

Mr. Mettler was a man of most winsome personality. Quick-witted, sunny and unselfish, he drew round himself a circle of devoted friends, which included all whoever came in personal relations with him. From early childhood he showed an obedient, confiding and refined character. This with increasing years developed into a cultured and gentlemanly manner which won for him a place in the hearts not only of his kindred, but his instructors, his fellow-students, and his associates in business. He had many accomplishments. His knowledge of music, both instrumental and vocal, was accurate, amounting even to a talent; and from boyhood was consecrated to the best uses as organist in the church of his family, and of which he early became a member. He was helpful by his courage and cheerfulness, by his energy and push, to a constantly widening circle, and all who knew him considered him a young man of unusual promise. He had passed the disciplining period, had shown his powers for independent action, and proved that success in the law could be secured by honorable methods. But in a moment he is removed from all the activities of this life, from a world which needs true-hearted and able men, and from a social sphere which lavished upon him an unlimited treasure of love. The Athenian statesman said, "When the youth are taken away, the spring is cut off from the year." A pang of distress, such as is seldom experienced, still wrings our hearts because of the premature and shocking death of this loved son, friend and pupil, Louis Howell Mettler.—J. C.

Studied medicine at Hood Wright Hospital after graduating from Rutgers. Received degree of A.M. (Rutgers, 1897); M.D. (Hood Wright Hospital, 1899). John S. Van Orden, of the Class of 1890 and the New Brunswick Seminary, 1893, is his brother.

ELLIS ROBERT WOODRUFF.

MR. WOODRUFF received his training for college at the Rutgers Preparatory School and entered college in the fall of 1889. While in college he showed marked ability as a student, graduating at the head of the Class of 1893, as well as taking an unusual number of prizes in speaking and in literary work. He was a man of exceptional energy and versatility. Indomitable will coupled with native genius brought him success in all departments of work which he undertook. Unlike many students of books, he was gifted with a large amount of executive ability. As business manager of the Targum, the college weekly, he transformed that publication from a struggling paper, of little interest to its readers, into a flourishing sheet with a sound financial basis.

In addition to his college duties he was active in mission work. Every Sunday found him engaged as a teacher and later as Superintendent of the Florence Mission, in the most needy quarter of New Brunswick. It was at this time that he first displayed the gift which was later noted by his professors at Union Seminary, that of being able to adapt himself easily to all classes. He could win the confidence and friendship of the ignorant and neglected whom he wished to help, but at the same time was perfectly at home in the society of the favored and cultured classes.

His life among his collegemates was one of a strict morality which could not fail to exert a beneficial influence upon all with whom he came in contact.

Upon graduating from Rutgers College, he entered Union Seminary to complete his preparation for his chosen calling. The same industry which had signalized his course at college immediately won for him at the seminary the interest and approbation of his professors.

He was regarded as one of the most promising men of the class, and high anticipations were entertained for his future career in the ministry. He became assistant pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, of New York City, in the early part of his seminary course, and was deeply interested in his pastoral work. This work, however, was suddenly ended. The question, why one of great promise and of full preparation for the work of saving souls is cut down at the very threshold of his life-work, is one which has never been answered satisfactorily to all, but we know that it often happens. His extended knowledge, unflagging energy, consecrated zeal and natural ability all indicate that, had he been spared, he would have been a man of wide reputation and of great use in the Christian church. He was called away before the battle had fairly begun. It was to his gain that he should be early bidden to higher service, though we cannot but feel that it was to the church's loss.—E. J. M.

GEORGE WASHINGTON MENDENHALL.

SON of Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Mendenhall, died at his home, in Bordentown, N. J., on October 13th, 1891, in the nineteenth year of his age. He had acquitted himself with great credit as a student, his earnest industry and his high sense of duty and right winning for him the respect and love of Professors and students alike.

Obedient to his superiors and thoughtful of the interests of all, the circle of his friends was very wide, both among the students and in the community where he dwelt.

Of a serious disposition, he had always regarded sacred things with the greatest reverence, and after uniting with the Church of Christ, about a year before his death, he became an energetic worker in God's vineyard, blending many Christian virtues in his character.

The Class of '93, and all the members of the College, bear witness to his beautiful and unselfish young life, whose influences remain.—F. B. S.

CLIFFORD STOCKTON SHAW.

SON of the Rev. John F. and Kittie G. Shaw, in his twenty-third year, died at Hyde Park, N. Y., on Monday, February 22nd, 1892. Clifford Stockton Shaw was the only son of the Rev. J. F. Shaw, and was a student in the Junior Class of Rutgers College, and was attending to his studies as usual up to within less than a week of his death. Reverential and serious in disposition, he early gave his heart to Christ, and exemplified in character and conduct the doctrines of his Master. He was a conscientious student, and it was natural for him to be kind and helpful and generous-hearted. Accordingly he was greatly beloved by his classmates and friends, and everybody who knew him was his friend. His sudden death in the very flower of his youth, and when his mind was full of bright anticipations for future usefulness and success, was a heavy stroke of affliction for his parents, but they will tenderly cherish his memory, and thank God for having given them a son so true to truth and so blameless in his life. Funeral services were held at the Hyde Park Reformed parsonage and in Kirkpatrick Chapel, which was draped, and were attended by the Faculty, students and friends. The burial was at New Brunswick.—T.
